

Fess Predicts Big Republican Congress Gains

Campaign Chairman Sees Majority of at Least 87 in House and 11 in Senate After U. S. Canvass

41 Districts Are Doubtful

Expects His Party to Have 261 Members in Lower Branch and 60 in Upper

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 30.—When the next Congress convenes the Republican majorities in both Houses will show large increases, according to a pre-election statement issued here tonight by Representative Simon D. Fess, of Ohio, chairman of the National Republican Congressional Committee.

His forecast, based on an analysis of reports from all Congressional districts, is that the Republican margin in the House will be increased from forty-five to at least eighty-seven, and that of the Senate from two to a minimum of eleven, and possibly seventeen, giving that body a safe working majority.

According to Mr. Fess's estimate, the next House will have in its membership not fewer than 261 Republicans and not more than 174 Democrats, and the Senate will be composed of from sixty to sixty-six Republicans and from twenty-four to thirty Democrats.

Twenty-seven Republican States

In making this forecast, Congressman Fess declared that, so far as the House is concerned, twenty-seven states are included in the sure Republican column. He estimated these states will return 229 Republican Congressmen—a gain of twenty from those states.

In doubtful states with Republican leanings, among which he included Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri and Colorado, Mr. Fess predicted that twenty-three Republican Congressmen will be elected; three in doubtful states with Democratic leanings (Nevada, Arizona, Oklahoma, Montana and New Mexico), and five members from certain Democratic states, including Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas.

Mr. Fess said that the Republican gain of twenty in the certain Republican states will result from gains of one member each in Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Michigan, Illinois and Nebraska, two members each in California, Kansas and Ohio, and three members each in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York. He asserted that three additional Republicans will be elected from Missouri and one each from Tennessee and North Carolina.

South Has Eighty-nine Seats

The eleven Southern states, classed as certainly Democratic, are figured by Chairman Fess's estimate as sending eighty-nine Democratic members to the House. Seven other Democratic Congressmen, Mr. Fess said, will be elected from doubtful states with Democratic leanings, and fourteen Democrats will be elected from doubtful states with Republican leanings. Added to these, Mr. Fess said, will be twenty-three Democratic Congressmen from states Republican states, making a combined total Democratic membership of 132.

Forty-one Congressional districts are placed in the doubtful column by Mr. Fess. "Considering the entire list of forty-one doubtful districts to the Democrats this would give them 174 members in the House of Representatives," Mr. Fess said.

Listed in Chairman Fess's doubtful group of districts are:

List of Doubtful States

Republican states: One Massachusetts district, four in New York, one in Pennsylvania, five in Ohio, one in Indiana, two in Illinois, one in Wisconsin (Victor Berger), three in Minnesota, one in South Dakota, one in Washington and one in California.

Democratic states: Two in Virginia, four in North Carolina, one in Alabama, one in Tennessee and two in Texas.

Doubtful states: One in Maryland, two in Kentucky, three in Missouri, one in Colorado, one in New Mexico and two in Oklahoma.

Certain Republican Senatorial gains are predicted by Mr. Fess to result in the Maryland, Kentucky, South Dakota, Idaho and California elections.

Senate races in Arizona and Colorado, he said, present better than an even chance for Republican success, while in Nevada and Oregon change from Democratic to Republican Senators is considered by him an even chance. He also declared there is a possibility of the election of Republican Senators in Oklahoma and North Dakota.

Malone Promises Aid To Firemen and Police

Will Improve "Football" of Both Political Parties" if He Is Elected

Dudley Field Malone, Farmer-Labor candidate for Governor, told audiences in Brooklyn and Manhattan last night that if he was elected he would work earnestly to improve the conditions of both firemen and policemen. At present, he said, these servants of the people were being used merely as the "football" of both political parties.

He pledged his support to a list of six Republican and Democratic candidates for the Supreme Court bench, although he said that Farmer-Labor candidates for the same office had been forced off the ballot through deception and trickery of the Tammany machine.

"I will support James O'Malley, Robert M. La Follette, Wasservogel, Edward McGoldrick, William P. Butler and District Attorney Swanwick," he said.

"Public employees are public servants," he continued. "But under a political machine developed by the two old parties they have come to be regarded as pawns in the hands of party bosses. Under a proper administration of governmental affairs, public employees will receive the same consideration that employees should receive in a sanely directed industrial or commercial establishment. Like all other workers, those of the public should be guaranteed the right to earn a living without fear of dismissal for any but a just reason. They should receive a wage or salary sufficient to maintain their families in health and reasonable comfort and should have an aid in the advancement of their working conditions."
